NEW YORK – September 22, 2011 – ZocDoc, a service dedicated to improving access to healthcare, today announced it received a Series C investment from Goldman Sachs, bringing the Series C investment in ZocDoc to $75 million, following a previous investment from DST Global. Total investment in the company has reached $95 million to date. The most recent funding will enable ZocDoc to speed its expansion into additional regions.

“We are delighted to receive this funding from Goldman Sachs, which will help enable us to bring ZocDoc’s promise of improved access to healthcare to more patients,” said Cyrus Massoumi, co-founder and CEO of ZocDoc. “By speeding our growth, we are building the healthcare infrastructure needed to effectively scale this massive industry.”

ZocDoc is improving access to healthcare by seamlessly integrating with doctors’ calendars in real-time and allowing patients to instantly book appointments. The service taps into the hidden supply of medical providers’ availabilities, such as the 10 to 20 percent of medical appointments that are cancelled or rescheduled at the last-minute. Doctors pay $250 per month for ZocDoc, using the service to increase patient satisfaction, appeal to the many patients looking for doctors online, and fill open appointment slots.

ZocDoc is now available in 11 metropolitan areas, six of which were launched in 2011 to date. ZocDoc currently offers more than 5.3 million available appointments with doctors and practitioners from among over 40 medical specialties, and is used by over 700,000 patients each month.
